Cover letter

Hi Wafer team,

I call myself a technomancer because technology felt like magic to me as a kid. The part I still love is getting a system to work for the person who actually needs it. That's what pulled me toward the Deployed role: the work starts before production and doesn't end when the first deployment goes live.

I've spent much of my career on that boundary. At Technomancy IT I work directly with clients from discovery through release and support. At Front Range Internet I led NOC escalations for hosting and colocation customers and built diagnostics operators could reuse. At NuPrice I built the repricing product and fielded the customer questions. If a result didn't make sense, the useful answer was where it came from and what we could verify, not just that the service was up.

I'd bring that habit to running customer evaluations, scoping what's wrong and making each rollout easier to support. I'd be learning the inference stack alongside Wafer's performance engineers, not claiming I've already tuned it. I'm open to relocating to San Francisco for the onsite role.

Thanks,
